2009 PFIZER/AAFP Foundation Visiting Professorship
Program in Family Medicine Award Recipient

Wyoming Valley Family Medicine Residency Program – Kingston, Pennsylvania

Visiting Professor: David Slawson, MD, of University of Virginia

Summary of Program:

The objectives for this professorship, developed by the faculty and residents of this residency program, are to improve clinical evidence-based medicine decision making skills through the use of computer-based sources of information, such as handheld computers, searchable databases and the internet, as well as, to strengthen the program's evidence-based medicine curriculum. In addition, the faculty and residents hope to improve their proficiency as teachers of evidence based medicine. Dr. Slawson is nationally and internationally known for his development of Information Mastery, which builds on the principles of evidence based medicine and makes them more applicable to the primary care setting. He is also experienced in training family medicine residents and fellows in the concepts of Information Mastery and evidence based medicine.
